Oysters – All you can slurp

The Annual Oyster Party gives alumni members an opportunity to renew old acquaintances and make new ones. With the price of oysters continuing to skyrocket, fresh oysters have become a somewhat regal fare, but Loyola Alumni is remaining constant in its tradition.

The festivities begin at 8p.m., Friday, October 3, at Hingston Hall (north end of campus). And there's a special twist: the class with the best representation will win a case of oysters.

Chairman of the event is Robert Bourgault '63 and committee members are Frank McNally '67, Robert Shaughnessy '65 and Elaine Boyce '75.

Tickets are available at $7.50 per person (all you can eat) at the Alumni Office, 7306 Sherbrooke Street West and at the door. You are invited to bring as many guests as you wish. Further information: 482-0320 Local 402.

The Walrus and the Carpenter
Walked on a mile or so,
And then they rested on a rock
Conveniently low:
And all the little Oysters stood
And waited in a row.

Fund Drawing

The 1975 Special Fund Drawing will be held Friday, October 3 at the Alumni Oyster Party, Hingston Hall.

Rector hopeful on fiscal future

Concordia rector John O'Brien told 80 students at Loyola that the university expects to get more money from Quebec in coming years.

"Government grants to Concordia are very, very, very much lower than they are to other universities in Quebec," he said.

"In the past, they (the government) did not think the gap should be closed," O'Brien said. "Now they admit there is a gap and we argue about how fast it should be closed."

He told the Administration Open Forum, held last week at Loyola's Campus Center, that Concordia received $33 million last year.

"But at this time, it is impossible to say what this year's total grant will be," he said.

O'Brien made the remarks in response to questions from Ron Silverman, a director of the Loyola Students Association, who also asked whether 80 percent of Concordia's budget was spent on salaries.

"I cannot say what the exact percentage is," O'Brien replied, "but it is certainly in that order of magnitude. Salaries are the major expense of universities."

Irwin Katsof, ex-senator and last year's LSA co-president, wanted to know why students could not move freely from course to course between Loyola and Sir George. "That," said O'Brien, "is under study. Concordia has not reached that stage in its development. Reports on these questions are just coming to light. In time, rules and regulations governing this will be drawn up."

Engineers reach for the sun

Solar-powered water heaters for the home could be just around the corner, thanks to a new prize-winning device from Concordia engineering students.

At the recent 1975 Student Competition on Relevant Engineering, the Concordia solar collector walked off with enough awards to put a warm glow on a lot of cheeks: first place in efficiency (for a 61% record); first place in system output (for the best solar energy performance); third place in innovation, and third place in the overall competition. This year's SCORE sweepstakes, held last month in Albuquerque, New Mexico, called for energy resource alternatives; it drew entries from over 65 universities across the U.S., Canada and the U.K.

The solar-powered water heater is the brainchild of five students—Paul Kiang, Eddie Lo, Don Brown, Michel Champagne and Davy Lee—working under mechanical engineering professors Hugh McQueen (Loyola '54) and Sui Lin.

It can heat 55 gallons of water to a temperature of 155 degrees Fahrenheit, and is designed for easy installation on the roof of a single-family home. The solar collector provides enough hot water for all summer needs (making it ideal for summer cottages), but just pre-heating support for winter, when the old electric water heater will still be needed.

The unit now costs $1,160 installed. At today's prices it saves the average family around $50 on the annual electricity bill, a figure that's bound to grow as costs rise.

"If people in Canada were to outfit their homes with this, the saving of energy would be considerable," says Prof. McQueen. He'll put his money where his mouth is by putting the first one up on the roof of his N.D.G. house soon.

Keeping tabs on IDs

By the time he closed shop last week, Eric Kilbertus issued more than 2,000 student ID cards at Loyola's Hingston Hall.

"It went better than last year," he said. "There were complaints about slowness last year. This year, people were more patient."

Kilbertus, student supervisor of para-academic registration, said

Loyola's day registration was up from last year, but evening division registration dropped slightly.

Another complication was the new Concordia ID card, rather than last year's Loyola card.

"Not that it makes much difference," he said. "There is still a Loyola campus card and another for Sir George."

And they're off . . .

Chancellor Alec Duff kicks off Concordia season, as Athletics Director Ed Enos ducks.

Coach Doug Daigneault figures he's got an exciting football team - even if he doesn't know what to call it. Last Saturday's season-opener proved it—Concordia bested Queen's, 17–14.

What to call the team, a result of the Warriors' merge with the Georgians, is a prickly question the Athletics Department hopes to solve by means of a contest now underway. "Whatever you do, don't call it the Concordians," said Daigneault.

So far the team has been hard at work, with two practices a day, weekends included. "We've got some of the best running backs in the country, there's a good mix of youngsters and veterans. Best of all, there's good spirit and attitude," beamed the coach.

Concordia's team plays in the eastern section of the Ontario Conference. To make the College Bowl, they've got to knock down Ottawa, Carleton, Bishop's, McGill, Queen's and the U. of T. Then it's on to toppling other playoff winners for the College Bowl before the Grey Cup game.

Those with inspirations for a name should contact the Loyola News office on the 3rd floor of the LSA building, or the Secretary's office at the Athletic Complex, Loyola.
